ecoartspace presents Fragile Rainbow: Traversing Habitats at the Williamsburg Art & Historical Center

Including more than fifty artists from the New York City region working in painting, sculpture, video and installation addressing environmental issues

Williamsburg, Brooklyn, New York—Fragile Rainbow: Traversing Habitats will be on view at the Williamsburg Art & Historical Center May 7–June 4, 2022, including over fifty artists who are members of ecoartspace, an international platform for artists addressing environmental issues.

The exhibition's title, "Fragile Rainbow: Traversing Habitats," found inspiration in the show's largest artwork, Claire McConaughy's painting Fragile Rainbow (2021). In her words, McConaughy's sanguine waterscape addresses "interconnection, loss, transformation, and hope." Her title is especially relevant for this heterogeneous exhibition of artworks by ecoartspace members based in the New York City region whose paintings, sculptures, photographs, and installations evoke "connection, loss, transformation, and hope." These artists are especially conscious of our indebtedness to living beings in our midst and human beings' obligation to appreciate and protect organic and inorganic matter alike.
